

I would like to state for the record that the relaxation of cellphone use in-flight would be another distraction to the flight attendant(s). Not only we have caved in serving alcoholic beverages to passengers (and then having to deal with disruptive, inebriated idiots), now we have to listen to a cacophony of people yacking on phones, all at once, in a sealed aluminum tube at 35,000 feet. Don't you feel guilty that the flight attendant profession is already the most abused workforce in the industry? I think the paying passenger, even those that employ cellphones constantly for business, would welcome a flight free from phone calls.
